At the October 1971 Network Working Group Meeting, I promised to promptly produce a document which clearly and succinctly specified and explained the Official Telnet Protocol. This document fails to meet any part of that promise. This document was not produced promptly. This document is neither clear nor succinct. There is NO Official Telnet Protocol.

2324: Hyper Text Coffe Pot Control Protocol (HTCPCP/1.0) , 1 April 1998

1. Rationale and Scope

There is coffee all over the world. Increasingly, in a world in which computing is ubiquitous, the computists want to make coffee. Coffee brewing is an art, but the distributed intelligence of the web-connected world transcends art. Thus, there is a strong, dark, rich requirement for a protocol designed espressoly for the brewing of coffee. Coffee is brewed using coffee pots. Networked coffee pots require a control protocol if they are to be controlled.

In "the Hacker's Dictionary" it says about the word FOO:

    "A hacker avoids using 'foo' as the real name of anything.
    Indeed, a standard convention is that any file with 'foo'
    in its name is temporary and can be deleted on sight."

Was this a clue to the fate of Lisa Foo?
Half baked brains are like a fallen souffle.
I maintain that the story is a crock.

BTW, when I was in grade school I thought of a Frob as a little medallion that construction workers wore from their belt showing a picture of something like a backhoe or bulldozer.
